

Away and Gone
By: Jessy B.

lying alone in a room of loneliness the smoking metal has blown me a kiss these blasphemous truths that are fed to you the decisions I've made I cannot undo the reason I whispered lies for you to hear was to take you away from being so near to my heart that of which is bleeding so freely now you may observe my mind on the ceiling why did you break me and bend me so for now you must watch my love flow into the shadows of an unforgiving sight within this darkness I've lost the will to fight lying under a delusional blanket with you beside me this night of seduction I never thought to be inside you, beside you, alone and together our minds away and gone in the never a falseness I remember that I do recall it is better to have loved than to have never loved at all so long ago you made you a part of me now you've taken that and left me with disease for wanting you again I will always feel no other fox will ever seem real why did you love me and leave me behind this is what has blown my mind if you would have been there when I painted the wall with my crimson thoughts I know you'd have never locked me in your heart shaped box